

What Can I Do With a Major in...

History?

Students who choose to major in history study a core curriculum rich in arts, sciences and humanities with a concentration in history courses. Students can also combine their studies with 30 credits in secondary education for the Pennsylvania Certification in Social Studies. The history program is designed to stimulate critical and analytical thinking, develop writing and research skills and heighten the student's understanding of the world. Students investigate the history of civilization, exploring the diversity of cultural, political and social customs, while examining events that have changed the course of civilization.

A degree in history prepares the student for careers in business, communications, education, government, journalism, and ministry. A graduate can also continue studies in government, history, political science, law, and museum administration.
